

Disputed centre approved after substantial changes

by Katherine Gutkind

The controversial proposed Centre for Regulated Industry which became known last year as "McGill's own Watergate" has "turned out to be a perfectly solid and correct project," according to Jack Weldon, professor of economics.

The proposed Centre created considerable stir last semester when the Daily learned that the McGill administration had accepted $700,000 from three corporations for the proposed Centre, without going through the proper academic approval channels.

According to Weldon the appropriate academic channels have been, and are presently being followed. This he attributes to the strong and persistent opposition taken by the Faculty of Arts during the controversy.

Last February, the Faculty of Arts proposed a resolution to have the Centre reviewed, which, according to Weldon, who was a co-sponsor of this resolution, operated with "a certain success. It was only with great reluctance and bad defense that the administration gave way," he said.

The original proposal, drawn up by Walter Balke of the Management Faculty has been completely erased, according to Weldon. In its place, two new proposals were drawn up—one by Dale Thomson, Vice-Principal of Planning and A. Asimakopulos, Chairman of the Department of Economics.

Asimakopulos' proposal has become a "substitute" for Thomson's, Weldon explained. The former's proposal was discussed at a meeting on March 26. According to Asimakopulos, Thomson combined the two proposals without his consent and sent them on for approval. "I objected to this whole document if it had not gone through the proper academic channels," he said.

It was at this departure that the whole mess was sent back to "square one".

Tomorrow, the Faculty of Graduate Studies Committee is meeting to approve the proposal put forth by Asimakopulos.

One of the main outcries concerning the Centre was that the proper academic approval was completely ignored. The new proposal, however, is going through the proper channels. Weldon said the violation of University regulations was "the most frightening thing. The Administration is very unaware of what a university is."

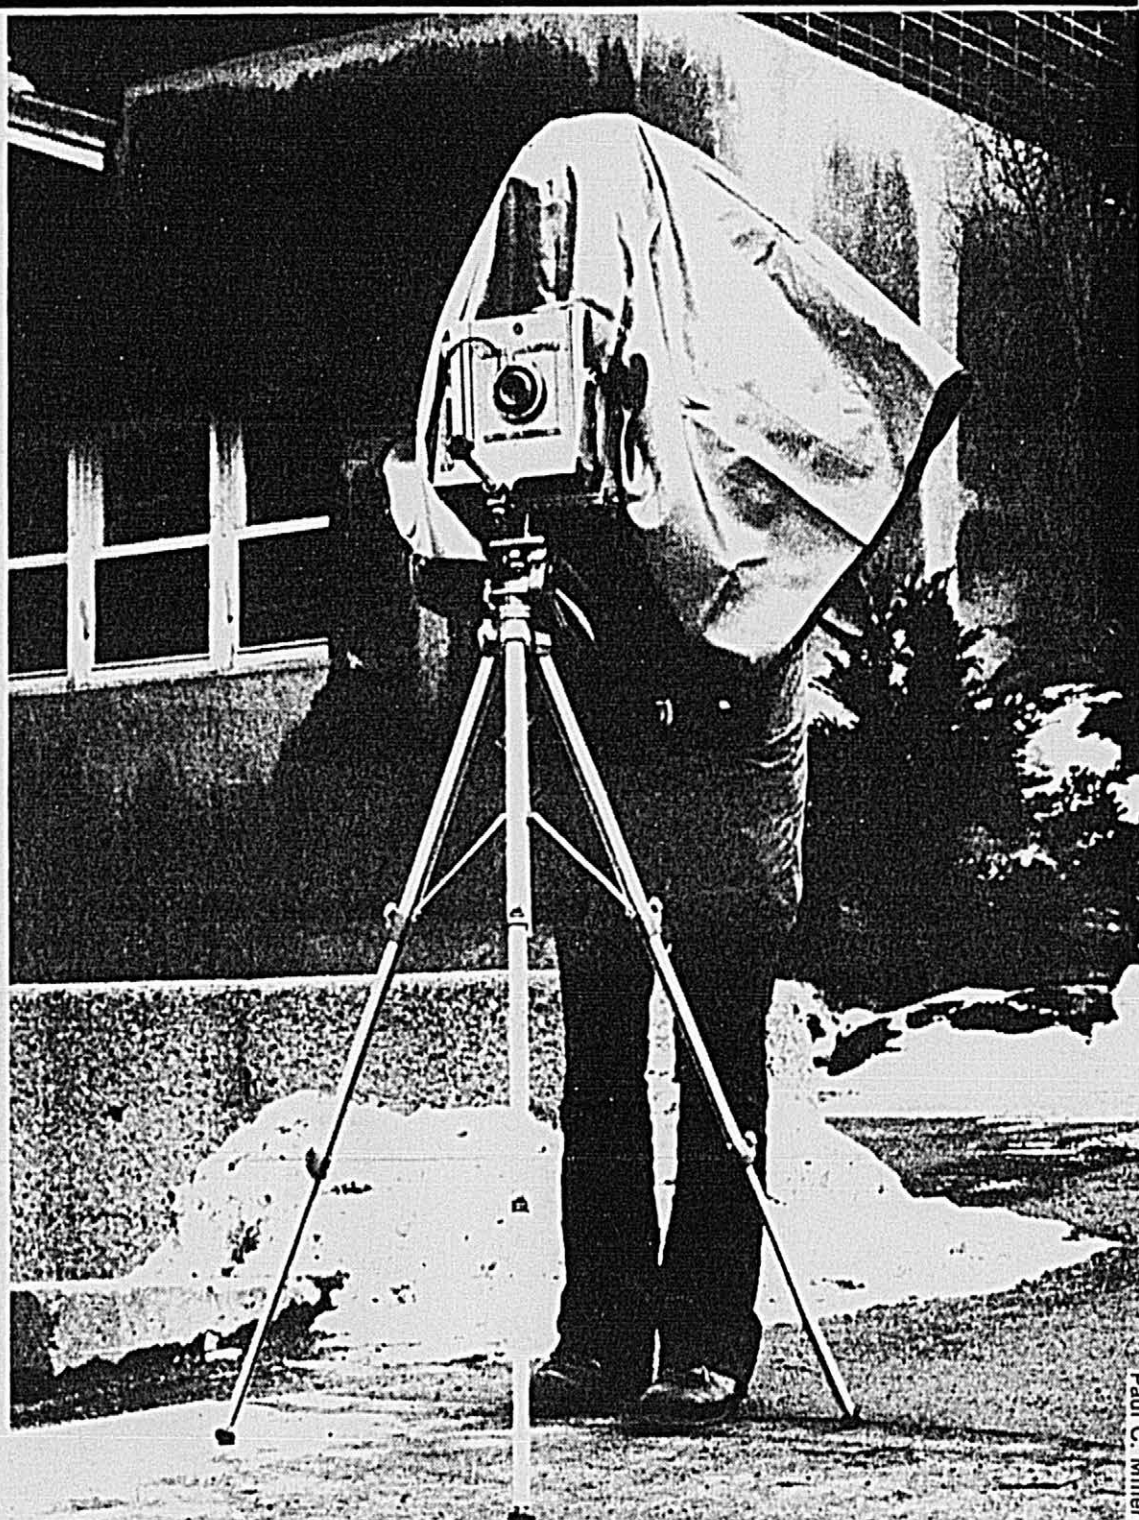

The former proposal called for an advisory board consisting of the three sponsors—Canadian Pacific, Bell Canada, Northern Electric and some members of the university. They were to review the Centre annually and then decide whether to fund it for another successive year.

Also the corporations were to fund the Centre on an annual basis and review its standing before the annual refunding.

With the new proposal, an academic advisory board is set up and the funding from the corporations will only be accepted if it is unconditional. It is not certain whether the corporations are willing to fund the Centre under the new proposal.

"We have not tailored a project in such a way to get corporation support," Asimakopulos said. "If funds are not available, we don't mind." If the

PHOTOGRAPHERS — COME OUT!

If you are planning to work for the Daily this year, please come in to arrange a mutually convenient schedule. The photography editor will be in every day this week between 1 and 2. New photographers are invited to come in to find out how they can become a part of the Daily photography staff. Photographers are reminded that they are expected to work at least once every two weeks, preferably on a regular basis. Photographers need no writing ability, as this announcement clearly shows.

Administration cuts pay of non-union employees; professors affected, Faculty Union protests

The following statement was submitted to the Daily by the Executive Committee of the McGill Faculty Union in response to the announcement by J. Armour, McGill comptroller, concerning salaries for teaching and other non-union staff, 1975-76.

Salary rates now being paid non-unionized staff are below those which existed in 1974-75, according to a statement issued by the McGill University comptroller last Friday. Should the Federal government now institute a wage-price "freeze", a very real possibility, salaries will continue below 1974-75 levels throughout the freeze period. In any event, any upward adjustment in salaries that may take place in the months ahead will be from a salary rate 0.63 percentage points below that which was received last year.

While McGill non-unionized staff salaries were 17.13 percent above Basic Earnings during the last pay year, they have now been set at only 16.5 percent above Basic Earnings.

J. Armour, the McGill comptroller, indicated in his statement "Cost of Living Supplements, 1974-75" the particulars of this salary reduction:

The Government of Quebec has now established the total Cost of Living Supplement due for the year 1974-75. The Supplement has been set at 17.13 percent of Basic Earnings received in the twelve months ending May 31, 1975.

At present there is no charge in the (University's) policy, as previously announced, of paying salaries at 1974-75 Basic Rates plus an interim supplement of 16.5 percent.

It should also be noted that there is no change in Basic Earnings and that the additional 16.5 percent is a supplement which is without contractual permanence.

The comptroller's statement goes on to say, "the 1975-76 salary policy is now under active review and it is hoped to announce a revised policy for non-unionized staff in the very near future." But if the policy is now under "active review", why has the salary cut not been corrected? The 17.13 percent salary supplement for 1974-75 was known at least two months ago.

Once again events are demonstrating that the staff cannot rely on the benevolence of the University administration to protect many of its vital interests. Our teaching colleagues at the Universities of Montreal, Laval, Quebec and Sherbrooke, as well as in a growing number of universities in other provinces, have chosen to take control of certain aspects of university life through unionization. The McGill Faculty Union believes that an essential step for McGill University teaching staff during this academic year is the attainment of similar status.

We need a union committed to the negotiation of a collective agreement under the Quebec Labour Code.

August's exploding star an astronomical rarity

by David H. Levy

The brightest nova in almost sixty years appeared in Montreal's sky last month. Although it rivalled the brightest stars for only two nights, it was well observed by many local astronomers and stargazers.

Called Nova Cygni 1975, the nova was invisible before August even in pictures taken with the two-hundred inch telescope on Mount Palomar.

While the word "nova" literally means "new star", a nova is new only in the sense that it has never been seen before by people on earth. A nova is actually an old star which has outlived its useful life. As it slowly shrinks to a "white dwarf" it becomes susceptible to violent explosions which can increase its brightness by millions of times in a single day.

There is no way of predicting when or where a nova will make its appearance in the sky. And it is this element of complete surprise that has made the discovery of a nova the most exciting thing which can happen in the astronomical world.

One would imagine that the explosion which caused the appearance of Nova Cygni would have completely destroyed the star, but this is a fallacy. The enormous increase in brightness actually affects only the very top layer of the star's "atmosphere", leaving the interior virtually intact. It is possible that stars of this type explode periodically (like every several hundred thousand years).

In last month's explosion, Nova Cygni probably lost no more than one per cent of its entire mass.

While the majority of exploding stars would fall in the category of novae, there are a few whose explosions are far more devastating. These most unusual stars are known as "supernovae", and the term is no exaggeration. A supernova, at the height of its explosion, may actually be brighter than the combined light of all the star clusters and gas clouds in its galaxy. Andromeda galaxy, for example, has over two hundred billion stars. At the end of the nineteenth century a star in that galaxy exploded, and for several months it was almost as bright as the light put out by the rest of the whole galaxy.

In our own galaxy only three supernovae have been observed. Nova Cassiopeiae erupted in 1572, was first seen by the astronomer Tycho, at maximum light was brighter than the planet Venus, and could easily be seen in daylight. Tycho's student, Johannes Kepler, observed a bright "new star" a generation later, in 1604. And Chinese records show what must have been a supernova explosion in 1054.

There are no visible remains of the 1572 and 1604 explosions. But the supernova of 1054 left a gas cloud which is still expanding. The cloud is easily visible in small telescopes and large instruments have detected, in the centre of the cloud, a very tiny, dense star known as a pulsar.

Supernovae, as a price they must pay for their excess in brilliance, lose up to fifty per cent of their mass in the explosion.

A third type of nova has been postulated but there have been no proven examples. If an ordinary nova loses a tiny fraction of its mass, and a supernova loses half its mass, could there not be a star whose explosion is so violent that its entire mass would be lost? Such a blow-up, called a super-supernova, would certainly be impressive.

Like ordinary novae, supernovae are old, dying stars. But the case of the supernova is different. Before the explosion the star becomes extremely dense. The gravitational pull of the star becomes so high that it actually collapses on itself, becoming so dense that its basic nuclear structure undergoes violent changes. This collapse is then followed by the gigantic explosion.

In the first days after the appearance of Nova Cygni on August 29, astronomers speculated that the Nova of 1975 might well be a supernova. It had risen in brightness by over twenty magnitudes, which is a lot for an ordinary nova. But two days after maximum the nova began to fade drastically. A supernova should have stayed around a while longer. In mid-September the nova had faded down to about ninth magnitude, visible only in a telescope. It is still fading, living contentedly with its memories of being the master of ceremonies of the late August sky.

Women's poetry reading

The McGill Women's Union is pleased to announce that it will be presenting a reading of women poets on Thursday, September 25, at 1 PM in the Sandwich Theatre. The poems are collected from the works of great women poets from Sappho and Margaret Cavendish to Denise Levertov and Susan Griffin. There are about twenty-five poems in all which have been scripted into a thoughtful reading by two members of the Women's Union. It was presented at the Women in Arts conference last spring. It will be read by the same three actresses this Thursday: Diane Morrison, Wendy Springate and Bronwyn Mantel. It was warmly received last spring and should be the object of attention for those interested in women and or poetry.

Support the St. Norbert Street Seven

Forty-nine St. Norbert Street homes are being destroyed by the City of Montreal in order to build a parking lot for municipal vehicles. This summer, tenants, members of many citizens' groups, and concerned individual citizens occupied St. Norbert St. to demand the renovation of these units and to publicize the facts about the intolerable housing situation in our city. On August 1, seven protesters were arrested for "failure to circulate." Their trial is TOMORROW.

Come and lend YOUR support: demonstration outside Municipal Court, 750 Bonsecours St. (1 block above Craig) Wednesday, September 24, 9:30 A.M.

Centre...

corporations decide not to fund the Centre, the money will have to be obtained elsewhere.

According to both Weldon and Asimakopulos the research concerns serious, legitimate problems about which very little work has been done in Canada and for which there is a need.

The aim of the Centre is to study the regulation of certain industries, in this case, transportation, communications and energy.

Why was the administration so secretive in the first place? According to Weldon, "that's the way that world operates." Asimakopulos sighed and said, "I just don't know."

Asimakopulos believes the Centre could be potentially exciting. It could well provide the opportunity for courses and interesting visiting academics.

According to Weldon, "the whole operation has now become an academic one," which is what he and some others set out to do.

Speaking as if the Centre had been a criminal offense, Weldon said "the goddamn crooks are caught."
